SCR 750—A concurrent resolution directing the legislative council to make a study of the legal and administrative aspects of shore lines and related land ownership, etc., and to make legislative recommendations to the 1967 legislature.

WHEREAS, Florida has an extensive coastal shore line of widely varying natural character, and

WHEREAS, the uplands adjoining this shore line are some of the most valuable and eagerly sought lands in the state, and

WHEREAS, because of their extreme value and peculiar, often changing, physical characteristics, these lands and the shore line on which they border are subject to an infinite variety of problems dealing with such matters as the exact seaward limits of upland ownership, the establishment on the ground of the line of mean high water, the rights of a riparian property owner to install shore protection devices, the nature and effect of general riparian rights, the effect on ownership of erosion and accretion, governmental authority to regulate riparian upland for protection of sovereignty lands, ownership of lands created incident to erosion control efforts, and countless others, and

WHEREAS, at the rate Florida is growing and its shore line areas are being developed, these problems can only become more complex and difficult to resolve in the future, and

WHEREAS, it is highly desirable that a sound, consistent and comprehensive policy be established by the state to cover all conceivable aspects of ownership, regulation and use of its coastal shore line and adjacent areas, to serve as a guide both for proper governmental administrative programs and for cases that may be ultimately litigated in the Florida courts, and

WHEREAS, because of the inherent complexity of these problems and the relative lack of experience in this particular area of law and public administration, there is not presently available in assembled form sufficient pertinent information upon which to base needed legislation, NOW, THEREFORE,

Be It Resolved by the Senate of the State of Florida, the House of Representatives Concurring:

That the Florida legislative council make a comprehensive study of the legal and administrative aspects of shore line and related land ownership, regulation and use, and all the ramifications thereof, for the purpose of identifying areas of legislation necessary to establish for this state a definitive, sound, consistent and practicable policy in such matters, and prepare specific legislative recommendations based thereon for consideration by the 1967 Florida legislature.
