

SENATE STAFF ANALYSIS AND ECONOMIC IMPACT STATEMENT

(This document is based only on the provisions contained in the legislation as of the latest date listed below.)

Date: April 14, 1998 Revised: _____

Subject: Termination of Pregnancies; Parental Notice of Abortion Act

	Analyst	Staff Director	Reference	Action
1.	Carter	Wilson	HC	Favorable/CS
2.	_____	_____	JU	_____
3.	_____	_____	WM	_____
4.	_____	_____	_____	_____
5.	_____	_____	_____	_____

I. Summary:

Committee Substitute for Senate Bill 1814 is designated the “Parental Notice of Abortion Act.” The Act requires that a physician who refers a minor for termination of her pregnancy or who plans to perform such a procedure on a minor must first give 48-hours actual notice prior to the procedure to one parent or her legal guardian. If actual notice is not possible after reasonable effort, 48 hours constructive notice must be given. Additionally, the bill provides for waiver of the notice requirement: (1) in instances of a medical emergency, as provided in the bill; (2) when notice is waived in writing by the person who is entitled to notice; (3) if the minor is or has been married or has had the disability of nonage removed under s. 743.015, F.S., or a similar law of other states; or (4) when a circuit court judicially waives notice based upon a petition filed by the minor seeking to terminate her pregnancy. The bill specifies the procedure for the judicial waiver of notice. The bill makes it actionable under the disciplinary provisions of the allopathic and osteopathic medical practice acts to perform a termination of pregnancy on a minor without providing the required notice.

This bill amends sections 390.011 and 390.0111, Florida Statutes. and creates one undesignated section of law.

II. Present Situation:

Federal Law

The 1973 United States Supreme Court decision in Roe v. Wade was premised upon the right of privacy which the Roe court held to be a “fundamental right” encompassing a woman’s decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy. Where a fundamental right is involved, regulations limiting that right are subject to strict scrutiny. Governmental regulation of a fundamental right is justified only by a “compelling state interest” which must be narrowly drawn to articulate only that interest. As relates to a state's regulation of termination of pregnancy, the Court found two interests sufficiently compelling enough to justify governmental intrusion on a woman's fundamental right to be left alone regarding her decision to terminate her pregnancy: (1) protecting the health of the mother and (2) protecting the viability of the fetus. The Court recognized that the health of the mother would only be a compelling concern after the first trimester, when abortion-related dangers outweigh the live-birth-related ones. Therefore, the Court held that during the first trimester, a state may not ban, or even closely regulate, abortions. It further held that second trimester abortions could be restricted only to protect the mother's safety.

The state's interest in the fetus is recognized, as applies to a fetus, only during the last trimester of pregnancy, when the fetus has become viable. Consequently, states could restrict or prohibit abortions entirely subsequent to fetal viability “except when necessary, in appropriate medical judgment, for the preservation of the life or health” of the woman. In Doe v. Bolton, the 1973 companion to Roe, the Court explained that the health of the mother represents a medical judgment that “may be exercised in light of all factors--physical, emotional, psychological, familial, and the woman's age--relevant to the well-being of the patient.”

In Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pennsylvania v. Robert P. Casey, 505 U.S. 833, 112 S.Ct. 2791, 120 L.Ed.2d 674 (1992) , the U.S. Supreme Court partially retreated from that position. Abandoning the trimester analytical scheme, the Court upheld the basic right of a woman to choose an abortion before fetal viability. However, the standard against which the Court evaluated state regulatory provisions restricting that right shifted from one of “strict scrutiny” to the less rigorous “undue burden.” Consequently, state efforts to promote a policy preference for encouraging childbirth over abortion is now permissible even if those measures do not further a health interest. Post-viability, the state may regulate, even proscribe, abortion “except where it is necessary, in appropriate medical judgment, for the preservation of the life or health of the pregnant woman.” In Casey, the Court also upheld the constitutionality of a provision of the Pennsylvania law that requires one parent to give informed consent before a minor may obtain an abortion, or the consent of a judge if the minor cannot or does not wish to obtain the consent of a parent.

State Law

Unlike the U.S. Constitution, the Constitution of the State of Florida contains an express provision guaranteeing a right of privacy, section 23 of Article I. Adopted in 1980, the Florida Supreme Court, in Winfield v. Division of Pari-Mutual Wagering, 477 So.2d 544 (1985), concluded that section 23 of Article I provided a strong right of privacy not found in the U.S. Constitution, which is interpreted to provide a right to privacy through the cumulative effects of a penumbra of federal constitutional provisions. In Winfield the court also provided a standard of review, holding that

The right of privacy is a fundamental right which we believe demands the compelling state interest standard. This test shifts the burden of proof to the state to justify an intrusion on privacy. The burden can be met by demonstrating that the challenged regulation serves a compelling state interest and accomplishes its goal through the use of the least intrusive means.

In In re T.W., 551 So.2d 1186 (1989), the Florida Supreme Court struck down a state statute requiring parental consent for a minor's termination of pregnancy as violative of Florida's constitutional right of privacy, "Florida's privacy provision is clearly implicated in a woman's decision of whether or not to continue her pregnancy." Given the broader protection provided by the Florida Constitution's express "right of privacy," and the higher burden that the state must assume to overcome that right, a state law requiring parental notification of an intent to terminate a minor's pregnancy would face a more challenging constitutional obstacle than would be the case under the privacy rights analysis under the U.S. Constitution and Casey.

During the 1997 legislative session, the "Woman's Right to Know Act" was enacted as chapter 97-151, L.O.F., amending ch. 390, F.S., the state law regulating termination of pregnancy. The Act requires physicians, prior to performing a termination of pregnancy procedure, to explain certain specified information to the woman who is to receive the procedure. In essence, the Act requires extraordinary informed consent of a woman seeking to terminate her pregnancy. Subsequent to enactment, the Circuit Court for the Fifteenth Judicial Circuit in Palm Beach County issued a temporary injunction that enjoined implementation of the Act. The District Court of Appeal of the Fourth District, during its January 1998 term, upheld the circuit court's injunction. The State, as appellant challenging the injunction, has filed a motion for rehearing which is pending before the district court.

As a result of the temporary injunction, changes made to ch. 390, F.S., have not been implemented. The Fourth District Court of Appeal upheld the temporary injunction on its finding that the 1997 changes to ch. 390, F.S., are unconstitutionally vague. The court based this finding on the shift in the applicable informed consent standard away from all other informed consent standards in state law. The court stated:

By changing informed consent from what a reasonable physician would do under the circumstances, to what a reasonable patient would want to know, but without the traditional informed consent language 'under the circumstances,' arguably leaves the physicians with no standards to comport to. Is the so called 'reasonable patient' a fourteen year old rape victim who is pregnant, or a mature woman who could have a variety of reasons for seeking an abortion?

Consequently, the law that governs the termination of pregnancies in Florida remains ch. 390, F.S., as amended through 1996.

Chapter 743, F.S., provides for removal of disability of nonage of minors. Removal of a minor's nonage disability is generally referred to as "emancipation." Under ch. 743, F.S., if a minor, defined in s. 1.01(13), F.S., as a person under 18 years of age, is married, has been married, or subsequently becomes married, including a minor whose marriage is dissolved, widowed, or widowed, the disability of nonage is removed. Additionally, under this statute, a circuit court may remove the disability of nonage of a minor age 16 or older residing in the state upon a petition filed by the minor's natural or legal guardian or a guardian ad litem. Once emancipated, a minor may assume the management of his or her estate, contract and be contracted with, sue and be sued, and perform all acts that he or she could do if not a minor.

Section 743.065, F.S., authorizes an unwed pregnant minor, i.e., unemancipated minor (unless emancipated by petition, as described above), to consent to the performance of medical or surgical care or services relating to her pregnancy by a hospital or a clinic or by a state-licensed physician. Furthermore, under this provision of law, an unwed minor mother may consent to the performance of medical or surgical care or services for her child by a hospital, clinic, or a state-licensed physician. Such consents are declared valid and binding as if the minor had achieved majority--that is, had attained her 18th birthday. This section is explicitly stated to not affect the law relating to termination of pregnancy as provided in ch. 390, F.S.

III. Effect of Proposed Changes:

Section 1. Designates the provisions of the bill as the “Parental Notice of Abortion Act.”

Section 2. Amends s. 390.011, F.S., providing definitions for terms used in the termination of pregnancy law, to add a definition for the terms: “actual notice,” “child abuse and neglect,” “constructive notice,” “medical emergency,” and “sexual abuse.”

Section 3. Amends s. 390.0111, F.S., relating to the regulation of termination of pregnancies, to include several additional subsections that impose requirements relating to the termination of pregnancy of a minor (a person under 18 years of age who has not been married and who has not been recognized under law as an adult for any reason), as determined by Florida law or similar laws of other states. New provisions added to this section are summarized under the subheadings that follow.

Actual or Constructive Notice of Intent to Terminate the Pregnancy of a Minor Required

A person performing or inducing the termination of a minor's pregnancy is prohibited from doing so unless the person has given at least 48-hours actual notice (i.e., giving the notice directly, in person, or by telephone) of his or her intent to terminate the pregnancy to one parent or the legal guardian of the pregnant minor. The notice may be given by a referring physician and the person who performs the termination of pregnancy must receive the written statement of the referring physician certifying that the referring physician has given notice. If actual notice is not possible after a reasonable effort, the person or his or her agent must give 48-hours constructive notice (i.e., giving the notice by certified mail to the last known address of the parent or legal guardian).

Actual or constructive notice to terminate the pregnancy of a minor is not required when a medical emergency exists and there is insufficient time for the attending physician to comply with the notification requirements. However, the attending physician must obtain at least one corroborative medical opinion attesting to the medical necessity for emergency medical procedures. If the attending physician is unable to obtain a corroborative medical opinion because no second physician is available, he or she may proceed with the termination of pregnancy, but must document reasons for the medical necessity in the patient's medical records. Also, a physician is not required to give actual or constructive notice of his or her intention to terminate the pregnancy of a minor when the person who is entitled to notice has, in writing, waived his or her right to notice; if the minor is or has been married or has had the disability of nonage removed under s. 743.015, F.S., or a similar law of other states; or the notice requirement is waived by a circuit court, as provided in the bill. Noncompliance with the notice requirements, as provided in the bill, makes a physician subject to disciplinary action under the allopathic or osteopathic medical practice act.

Judicial Waiver of the Notice Requirement

The bill authorizes a minor, whether or not a resident of Florida, to petition a circuit court for a waiver of the requirement of a physician to give actual or constructive notice of his or her intention to terminate the pregnancy of a minor at least 48 hours prior to performing or inducing the termination. The petition must include a statement that the complainant is pregnant and that notice has not been waived. The court may appoint a guardian ad litem who is required to maintain the confidentiality of the proceedings. Also, the court must advise the minor that she has a right to a court-appointed counsel, and must provide her with counsel upon her request. Court proceedings relating to a petition for waiver of notice must be confidential, must ensure the anonymity of the minor, and must be sealed. Additionally, all documents relating to the proceedings are given confidential status and are unavailable to the public. Minors petitioning for waiver of notice must be allowed to use a pseudonym or only their initials.

The courts are directed to give precedence to the proceedings relating to petitions for waiver of notice over other pending matters to the extent necessary to ensure that the court reaches a decision promptly. The courts must rule, and issue written findings of fact and conclusions of law, within 48 hours of the time that the petition was filed unless an extension is requested by the minor who submitted the petition. If the court petitioned fails to rule within the 48-hour period allowed and an extension has not been requested, the petition is deemed to have been granted and the notice requirement is waived.

A circuit court may waive the notice requirement if it finds, using a clear and convincing evidence standard, that the minor is sufficiently mature to decide whether to terminate her pregnancy or that there is a pattern of physical, sexual, or emotional abuse of the minor by a parent, guardian, or custodian or that the notification of the parent or guardian is not in the best interest of the complainant. If the court makes any such findings, it must issue an order authorizing the minor to consent to the performance or inducement of a termination of pregnancy without notification of a parent or guardian. At the hearing on the petition, the court must receive evidence relating to the emotional development, maturity, intellect, and understanding of the minor, and must issue written and specific factual findings and legal conclusions supporting its decision and shall order that a confidential record of the evidence and the judge's findings and conclusions be maintained.

Expedited Appeal of a Petition for Waiver of Notice that is Denied and Court Fees

If the petition for waiver of notice is denied by the circuit court, an expedited confidential appeal must be available, as provided by rule of the state Supreme Court. However, an order authorizing waiver of notice is not subject to appeal. No filing fees may be assessed against a minor petitioning for judicial waiver of parental notice at either the trial or appellate levels. The notice requirements and procedures, as provided in the bill, are made available to minors whether or not they are residents of Florida. The state Supreme Court is requested to adopt rules to ensure that proceedings under s. 390.0111, F.S., are handled in an expeditious and confidential manner and in a manner which will satisfy the requirements of federal courts.

Section 4. This section provides for the severability of the provisions in the act or application of provisions in the act to any person or circumstance which can be given effect from a provision that has been invalidated.

Section 5. Provides for the bill to take effect upon becoming a law.

IV. Constitutional Issues:

A. Municipality/County Mandates Restrictions:

The provisions of this bill have no impact on municipalities and the counties under the requirements of Article VII, section 18 of the Florida Constitution.

B. Public Records/Open Meetings Issues:

On page 6, lines 25-31, the court proceedings relating to petitions for judicial waiver of notice are made confidential and must ensure the anonymity of the minor and certain specified court documents are excluded from public access. For this provision to take effect, a separate Public Records Law bill must be enacted that exempts the affected proceedings and documents from the requirements of the Public Records Law. Apparently, no such bill has been filed.

C. Trust Funds Restrictions:

The provisions of this bill have no impact on the trust fund restrictions under the requirements of Article III, subsection 19(f) of the Florida Constitution.

D. Other Constitutional Issues:

Chapter 390, F.S., as enacted through 1996, would appear to regulate only third trimester terminations of pregnancies, as provided in s. 390.0111(1), F.S., except that s. 390.0111(2), F.S., prohibits anyone other than a physician from performing a termination of pregnancy at any time. To the extent that any provision of this bill would require a minor to first notify a parent or legal guardian before she may have her first-trimester pregnancy terminated, such a provision may be construed as violative of such minor's privacy rights under the State Constitution as interpreted in the state Supreme Court opinion In Re T.W.

V. Economic Impact and Fiscal Note:

A. Tax/Fee Issues:

None.

B. Private Sector Impact:

Though indeterminable, there can be considerable costs to physicians referring a minor for a termination of pregnancy and physicians who agree to perform or induce terminations of pregnancy resulting from the notice requirements.

C. Government Sector Impact:

Additionally, there could be a significant fiscal impact on state courts resulting from the judicial waiver of notice proceedings for evidentiary hearings, expedited hearings, appointment of counsel, sealing records, preparation of records for appeal, and other related requirements. Also, since the bill explicitly authorizes non-resident minors to use the state court system to petition for judicial waiver of notice, what are already indeterminable costs are made even more so and are made even more unpredictable.

The Department of Health anticipates that this bill will result in increased demands and funding needs for social and health services such as Healthy Start, WAGES, and the Women, Infants, and Children (WIC) programs.

VI. Technical Deficiencies:

On page 5, lines 12-23, the bill requires the person performing or inducing the termination of a minor's pregnancy, and, alternatively, authorizes the person who refers a minor to a person who will perform or induce the termination of the minor's pregnancy to give at least 48-hours actual notice to one parent or the legal guardian of the intent to terminate the minor's pregnancy. The person who performs the termination of pregnancy is required to receive the written statement of the referring physician certifying that the referring physician has given notice. There are no guidelines provided for how such certification is to be achieved.

On page 5, lines 21-23, it is unclear how any one who is required to give actual notice could establish that reasonable effort has been directed toward that objective, as required, before constructive notice may be given. Failure to make reasonable effort would subject the violator, if a physician, to professional disciplinary action.

On page 6, lines 4 and 5, it is unclear, given the circumstances addressed in the bill, how a person who is entitled to notice could waive their right to notice in writing without receiving notice. This provision of the bill should be revised or deleted.

On page 6, line 18, and page 7, line 21, the word “complainant” is used when the more appropriate word, given the context, is “petitioner.”

Page 8, lines 16-18, providing for non-resident minors to use the judicial waiver of notice procedure created in the bill, seems to raise jurisdictional issues relating to non-resident parents. Additionally, such a provision would seem to encourage teenagers from around the country to pursue judicial waiver of parental notice for the termination of their pregnancies in Florida, which could be extremely burdensome and possibly unmanageable over time.

Page 10, lines 14-18, requests the Florida Supreme Court to adopt rules relating to implementing the requirements of the bill which will satisfy the requirements of state and federal courts. In that the state Supreme Court has no jurisdiction over federal courts and federal courts are subject to case law that may, and more often than not do, impose judicial precedents, laws, regulations, and other imperatives different from those of state jurisprudence and law, such a request appears inappropriate and problematic, at best.

VII. Related Issues:

Current law under ch. 390, F.S., requires abortion referral or counseling agencies, before making a referral or aiding a person in obtaining an abortion, to furnish such person with a full and detailed explanation of abortion, including the effects of and alternatives to abortion. Subsection 390.025(2), F.S., further requires that if the person advised is a minor, a good faith effort shall be made by the referral or counseling agency to furnish such information to the parents or guardian of the minor. Failure of such agencies to comply with the requirements imposed in s. 390.025, F.S., subjects the violator to punishment for a first degree misdemeanor. This bill requires the person performing or inducing the termination of a minor's pregnancy, and, alternatively, authorizes the person who refers a minor to a person who will perform or induce the termination of the minor's pregnancy to give at least 48-hours actual notice to one parent or the legal guardian of the intent to terminate the minor's pregnancy. The person who performs the termination of pregnancy is required to receive the written statement of the referring physician certifying that the referring physician has given notice. If, after reasonable effort, actual notice has not been given, the person (presumably the person performing or inducing the termination of pregnancy) or his or her agent is required to give 48-hours constructive notice (notice sent by certified mail to the last known address of the minor's parent or legal guardian). Such a requirement does not appear inconsistent or to conflict with the notice requirement imposed on abortion referral or counseling agencies under existing law.

VIII. Amendments:

None.

This Senate staff analysis does not reflect the intent or official position of the bill's sponsor or the Florida Senate.
